

CENTQUATRE

Sofia Scoular Castillo

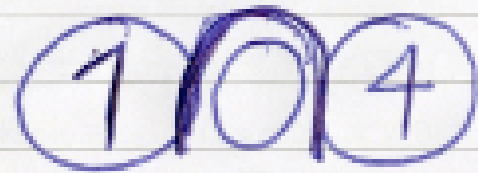

Located in the 19th arrondissement Le Centquatre-Paris is a public cultural center open to everyone to come and practice their craft.

What most attracted me to this space was the openness of it all. Not only is it an architecturally very open plan but it is also extremely open in its mindset. It welcomes everyone from all paths of life to come together and be creative, to connect, and cross boundaries, thereby becoming interdisciplinary in nature.

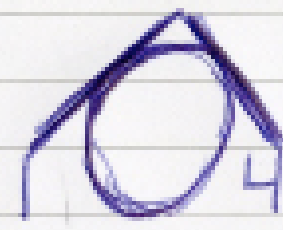

Emphasis on being open to everyone as well as a physically open space

Openness between letters and colors or black in between them based on exterior architecture of building.

LE CENTQUATRE

express of the space and concepts

With all of my sketches I tried to place as much emphasis as possible on the idea of openness. An open space and welcoming to everybody. I ended up creating a combination of the two first sketches and this idea was later expanded on based on my chosen typeface.

LL Brown

LL Brown owes much to the groundbreaking work of both Edward Johnston and Arno Drescher, whose respective designs – Johnston Sans (1916), and Super Grotesk (1930) – are historically among the most influential geometric sans serifs. The Underground Electric Railways Company of London commissioned Johnston Sans, and after having been adopted as corporate typeface for all of London’s public transport in 1933, the typeface is still in use until today. Super Grotesk had initially been less successful, but it enjoyed considerable success in the German Democratic Republic (GDR) after the Second World War, eventually becoming one the most widely used typefaces in East Germany.

As LL Brown demonstrates, the successful fusion of these two typefaces points to a shared cultural heritage only partially overshadowed by the many political and economic antagonisms of the Cold War. Ironically, the ubiquitous public face of Western Europe’s finance capital shared its modernist roots with a typeface that only ever found post-war success in communist Germany. This historical coincidence was recognised by Zurich-based designers and editors Lex Trüb and Urs Lehni, who originally suggested to fuse the two typefaces in 2007.

An overnight success, LL Brown was developed further in the years to follow. Additional Medium and Black weights were added, and Aurèle revisited the original design to make detailed formal changes to many glyphs across the whole font, carefully optimising the design and making it more distinctive and harmonious. As a next step, non-Latin scripts were produced, in close collaboration with Panos Haratzopoulos (Greek), Ilya Ruderman & Yuri Ostromenski (Cyrillic), Daniel Grumer (Hebrew), and Titus Nemeth (Arabic).

In 2019, Aurèle revisited a project he had abandoned earlier – to create condensed companions for LL Brown. The result has been published in Spring 2022 as two full families, in Narrow and Condensed proportions. We are currently in the process of producing variable files for the LL Brown, offering fonts with weight, width and slant axes. Please contact us if you are interested.

Aurèle Sack

Upon graduating from ECAL/University of Art and Design Lausanne, in 2004, Aurèle Sack (*1977) went to work in Zurich. At NORM, where he had already interned during his studies, he contributed to redrawing the corporate typeface of Omega as well as to developing LL Purple (2006).

After beginning to teach type and editorial design at ECAL in 2010, Aurèle became a typographic household name with the publication of LL Brown (2011). He served as a consultant for the redesign of Vogue Homme International, bringing in LL Brown and a new customised typeface, AS Turquoise.

LL Purple and LL Brown each won Aurèle a Swiss Design Award, and in 2014 he followed up with his third font named after a colour, LL Grey (released in 2018). In the meantime, he returned to optimising and extending the LL Brown family, and he worked on a number of new custom made fonts – such as for Swissquote – as well as on new designs. LL Ivory, Aurèle’s first full family of serif fonts, is currently in production and is scheduled for release in Spring 2022.

Finding LL Brown really moved my project along as I saw it had great potential for bringing my logo concept to life. I realized there was potential in dragging out lines, joining letters, and customizing glyphs all to create a unified logo and visual identity. It was a bonus that this typeface has so many variations as I was able to choose one format as my primary typeface and another as my secondary typeface.

The 13th edition: Three years ago, as we resumed the art direction of our festival as a collective, we made the commitment to be ourselves. A polyphonic group such as a collective may seem risky. But here, our voices are in harmony, each with its own frequency, and welcome each other. There are advantages to letting another guide you, putting your ego to one side and moving forward together, as we have done with our artists, partners and audience for 13 years. The Fetart collective is made up of 10 curators who shamelessly assert their beliefs through a free artistic direction and an unwavering commitment to emergence. Our call for candidates is open to all young photographers in geographical Europe, without any imposed theme, with the simple and necessary aim to bear witness to their aspirations, dreams and concerns, to take the pulse. The topics are manifold, as are the forms and aesthetics. Each year, a breath of creativity comes our way and reveals trends. In this edition, some make use of the accumulation of images for investigation projects, taking history or representations apart to offer a liberating reading of them. Others explore their ethnic origins, multiculturalism and the impact of colonisation or migrations on identities and ways of life. Others still question the limits of science and technology, and the latter's tendency to dehumanise bodies, animals and nature. These common interests and processes illustrate our society's evolutions, of which artists are both observers and actors, broadening our perspectives and stimulating our conscience. Similarly, our focus on Armenia this year takes us a little further, and questions artistic territoriality. It celebrates what connects us to countries bordering Europe, which, despite the distance, are closely linked to us via history, culture and an unquestionable creative effervescence. Openness to others is the fundamental dynamic that has contributed to making Circulation(s) the major platform that it has become over the years. And we are delighted to see it grow and become more and more relevant. Delighted also that, with each edition, our artists have an intense, and above all humane, artistic and collective experience. Delighted, too, to remain the actresses of a European photographic scene with inclusive and solidary values – for this is what our world needs today! For this 13th edition, we decided to treat ourselves and, we hope, you too to a surprise. The Fetart collective wishes you a wonderful visit!
